The client's scope was to design and simply transform each of the spaces so they matched the already functional spaces in Sydney, Adelaide and Melbourne.

The client wanted the same scaled system that was familiar to them and easy to use. The client still wanted to have control over the systems and how they behaved but wanted the system to remain as flexible and intuitive for their users to avoid poor user experience.

All collaborative areas now include BYOD functionality so staff can connect with their own devices. Room booking panels were installed outside meeting rooms so it's clear when a room is in use.

To deliver this solution, we partnered with AMX for all control, Samsung for the display solution and Polycom for all video conferencing. The refresh included the main boardroom, a large joinable conference room

"The team was friendly and provided any information when asked and came to help instantly when issues were occurring. I was very happy with the Pro AV team who made sure that everything was going according to schedule."

a multi-function projector room, a partners meeting lounge, a flexible display trolley that could be moved between spaces and digital signage.

The large corporate boardroom is now configured like a traditional boardroom with two large format displays and a camera in centre so even audience at the back of the room can see the screen clearly and can be seen by callers on the other end. Innovative ceiling mics were installed so audio is clear on every call. The room is fully controllable through the AMX touch panel control not just the technology in the room but the lights and blinds as well.

The more complex space was the multi function projector room, predominantly used for training or town hall meetings.

With three motorised Epson projectors that are lifted and three 310" motorised screens, anyone in the room can clearly see what is being displayed. The solution also allows the clients to use one or two projectors at a time if there is a smaller audience. The client also has the option to open this room up and use all three projectors for larger presentations.

KPMG Canberra defines the workplace of the future. The design of the office space was methodically planned and designed with staff and clients in mind, creating an environment that better reflects their lifestyle.
